IMPORTANCE OF

The Tur (1 א"ח) rules that it is advisable to say Parshios HaKorbanos during Shacharis every morning, and after describing the Korbanos Olah, Mincha, Shelamim and Asham, one should say a little Tefilah, asking Hashem to accept the Tefilah as if one had actually offered such a Korban. However, after the Korban Chatas, one does not say such a Tefilah. The Bais Yosef asks, without such a Tefilah, why describe the Korban Chatas at all? The Gemara (Shabbos 31a) states that when one is brought to stand in final Heavenly judgement, he will be asked several questions, such as קבעת עתים לתורה, נשאת ונתת באמונה, קבעת עתים לתורה. The Beis Efraim (Hakdamah) points out that at that time, when each mitzvah performed is examined, included in the examination will be the Torah that one studied in order to know how to do the mitzvah. Tosafos (Bava Basra 17a) states that the performance of every mitzvah implies that one studied its rules. For if not, how would one have known what to do? Thus, if the Torah associated with each mitzvah was included when the mitzvah was examined, what is the meaning or even the necessity of קבעת עתים לתורה? Wasn't his Torah study already established? It must be that this refers to study in areas not leading readily to any practical application, such as the study of Korbanos, which we cannot perform today. Thus, since the initial stage of every mitzvah is to study its laws, it follows that wherever one cannot go further than that in practice, he is able to effect only a partial consequence. As such, even without the Tefilah, studying the laws and rules of a Korban Chatas automatically provide at least a partial Kaparah.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK:

Two people, each randomly selected a fork at the same time, from the same mixture of silverware, on Shabbos and each placed it where it belonged. One did an Issur and the other did not. Why?

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK:

(May one be יטע Mishloach Manos by giving to an irreligious Jew?)

Chazal expounded on the phrase: ומשלוח מנות איש לרעהו, that Mishloach Manos can only be fulfilled with someone who is deemed "רעהו" – one who fulfills mitzvos. Accordingly, the Mor V'Ohalos rules that one cannot fulfill the mitzvah with someone who is not רעהו. The Orchos Chaim however rules that it is valid, where the recipient is a Tinok SheNishba.

DIN'S CORNER:

Although it is recommended that one stand during Chazoras HaShatz in order to concentrate better (and avoid talking), a person may sit after the Baal Tefilah completes the brocho of הקל הקדוש. However, he must later rise and remain standing during the saying of מודים since one may not bow when one is sitting. An officially appointed Gabbai has the right to determine if the minhag of the Tzibur is to stand for Chazoras HaShatz. (Yechave Daas 5:11)

DID YOU KNOW THAT

The Gemara (Chagigah 25a) states that in Galil, the Talmidei Chachomim used to prepare their wine and oil with Taharah, being careful to maintain their purity in case the Beis HaMikdash should suddenly be rebuilt, requiring pure wine and oil for Menachos. The Mishna LaMelech (Aveil 1:3) says that in the days of the Talmud, the Bnei Yisroel were still in possession of some Parah Adumah ashes, with which to keep themselves Tahor. This explains how they were able to keep their wine and oil pure. The Yerushalmi (Shabbos 1:3) states that R' Chiya told Rav, "If you can't eat all year in a state of Taharah, at least do so for seven days in the year". The Tur (א"ח 603:1) says that his father (the Rosh) told him that these 7 days were the 7 days between Rosh HaShanah and Yom Kippur. Only "7" are listed because on Rosh HaShanah itself, everyone knew they must become Tahor, as R' Yitzchok said: חייב אדם לטהר עצמו ברגל (Rosh HaShanah 16b). However, the Meforshim note that the Tur (ibid 606) quotes the Rosh who disputes R' Saadya Gaon who says that one should immerse in the Mikveh on Erev Yom Kippur, and recite a brocho. The Rosh maintains that such immersion has no Talmudic source and that R' Yitzchok's חייב אדם לטהר עצמו statement refers to Taharah by applying the Parah Adumah's ashes, which we have none of today, and not to the Mikveh. Does this not contradict his Rosh HaShanah definition of Taharah? The MaHaritz Chayes suggests that the Rosh also holds חייב אדם לטהר עצמו refers to Taharah through the Parah Adumah. Therefore R' Chiya's instruction to Rav was that he should purify himself before Rosh HaShanah using the Parah Adumah's ashes, which existed during their time, as the Mishna LaMelech said, and remain Tahor all week. However, ashes did not exist during the time of R' Saadya Gaon. Therefore, he could not have meant such a Taharah, but suggested instead, immersion in the Mikveh. The Rosh took issue with this, maintaining that R' Yitzchok's obligation of Taharah refers only to the Parah Adumah, and not to the Mikveh.

A Lesson Can Be Learned From:

A priest once pointed out the uncharacteristic behavior of Jews during the festival of Purim, to R. Yonasan Eibeshutz. Not only do they drink and frolic openly, but even the rule which says that Jewish holidays begin at night and continue into the next day seems to have been abrogated, since the Purim celebration continues on well into the following night! R. Yonasan replied: "It is just as surprising to me that although all of your holidays are celebrated wildly, starting by day and continuing into the night, you make an exception on December 25 (or January 6) where for some reason, you celebrate with solemnity, beginning on the night before. However, one explanation answers both incongruities. Purim commemorates events where a gentile was manipulated and the Jewish nation was saved. We therefore celebrate it in gentile fashion, with carousing, even into the following night. Your holiday, however, stems from the birth of a Jew. You therefore celebrate it with dignity, in Jewish fashion, beginning the night before".
